Sara Light-Waller Launches New Novel “Out of the Aethers”

CENTRALIA, WA. Out of the Aethers by Sara Light-Waller launches this week exclusively on LucinaPress.com. The book comprises two stories: Anchor, a short story, and Traveler, a full novel. Together they form a cohesive whole, a grand space adventure—a literary descendant of the wonderful space operas penned by Edmond Hamilton and E. E. “Doc” Smith.

The author is also a professional illustrator specializing in the magazine art of the 1930s and 40s. Out of the Aether’s dust jacket art is hand-painted and reminiscent of the work of Earle K. Bergey. The black and white frontispiece is cohesive with the pen and ink interior illustrations of the science fiction pulp magazines of the 1930s and 40s. The book’s dust jacket design is inspired by the pictorial dust jackets on the Chelsea House novels from the 1930s. Chelsea House was the novel publishing arm of Street & Smith, creating novels from their most popular magazine serials by their best authors like Max Brand and Johnston McCulley.

This is the first book in the Time Keeper series. The name Time Keeper is a pun, referring to a watch in the sense of both a timepiece and a watchman. And the Time Keepers are watchmen, guarding the time roads from interference by their nemeses, the Agaereon Time Pirates. The Time Keepers consider their mission a sacred one, and their race was created to do just that.

Mytah is an unusual Time Keeper as, unlike the rest of his people, he doesn’t share their genetic memories. He and his partner, Phylesse, are young time agents, just out of school. On their first assignment, while Phylesse is on Earth of the past, Mytah is kidnapped by Agaereons. The connection between the pair is snapped, and without her anchor, who provides a telepathic reference point, Phylesse is cast adrift in time and gains amnesia, believing her cover identity real. Meanwhile, Mytah is pulled into an adventure on a world that has sapped his powers. How can he return and save Phylesse while trapped in a human body?

The new novel is Ms. Light-Waller’s fifth work of new pulp. Out of the Aethers will be available on August 5, 2026, and offered only on LucinaPress.com.
